[Representative Case] ZTE v.s. Conversant Regarding SEP License Conditions Litigation

This is a representative case of SEP license conditions litigation. Conversant filed patent I infringement litigation against ZTE and Huawei in United Kingdom, claiming the global license. To this, Chang Tsi & Partners, representing ZTE, filed a SEP license case against Conversant in China, claiming the local license. And then, Conversant filed a patent infringement litigation against ZTE in Düsseldorf Regional Court. Obviously, this is a typical parallel case among different jurisdictions. We helped ZTE to maintain the dangerous balance in different jurisdiction, to reach utmost for our client's interest.

The well-known milestones of the case

1. Supreme Court of China issued a ruling for the jurisdiction of SEP litigation in China, a high profile ruling with guidance effect.
2. UK Supreme Court affirms the right of Conversant to seek a worldwide portfolio FRAND license in its case against Huawei and ZTE.
3. ZTE's mobile phones infringed two of Conversant's SEPs. Düsseldorf Regional Court has prohibited ZTE from selling UMTS-enabled devices in Germany.
4. Shenzhen Intermediate Court prohibited Conversant from enforcing the rulings against ZTE. Interesting anti-anti-suit battle.
5. Conversant and ZTE reached a global settlement.

Legal reasoning of Anti-suit injunction issued by Shenzhen Intermediate Court

- Enforcing Düsseldorf Regional Court's judgment would have negative impact on the case ZTE v. Conversant.
- Such anti-suit injunction is necessary and urgent for ZTE, otherwise, ZTE might suffer irreparable harm.
- The balance of interest is also beneficial for ZTE.
- Such anti-suit injunction would not harm the public interest.
- International courtesy, ZTE vs. Conversant in China is prior to Conversant vs. ZTE in Germany.
